History [edit]
After founding Sledgehammer Games on July 21, 2009, Schofield and Condrey made Activision a proposal: they would💶 attempt to replicate their success with Dead Space, with a third-person spin-off of the Call of Duty franchise. Activision sat💶 on the proposal for weeks until Activision Blizzard CEO Bobby Kotick offered to bring the studio into the Activision fold.💶 Schofield and Condrey accepted, viewing Activision's independent studio model as an opportunity to preserve the company's creative culture, development methodology💶 and staff, while having the security of an alliance with the industry's largest publisher.[7][8][9]
The collaboration with Infinity Ward marked the💶 first time a co-development relationship would produce a Modern Warfare title, with both companies' logos appearing on the packaging. Despite💶 the companies differing histories and development methodologies, GamesTM called the arrangement "a rare symbiotic relationship for such a high-profile game".💶 The two teams first met in the spring of 2010 to compare ideas. There was some overlap: both teams wanted💶 to set the game in Europe and, recalled Schofield, achieve a payoff on the story that had been told over💶 the last four years. [10][11]
Following leaks in Q2 of 2024, Sledgehammer would then develop Call of Duty: Modern Warfare III, the💶 franchise's twentieth release, which was released on November 10, 2024.[29][30]
As of August 2024, Sledgehammer employs about 450 people. New employees💶 are given a challenge coin engraved with the Sledgehammer Games' values. The tradition dates back to a World War I💶 practice of giving soldiers coins with a squadron's insignia that could be used to prove membership.[7]
